Promoting youth development and ethnic interaction

The bitter civil war of the Nineties crippled all aspects of society in the republics of the former Yugoslavia, and the region's young people continue to be affected by their countries' recent past. In 2005, Football Friends was created to help this younger generation transform their lives and to help heal the fragmented societies in which they are growing up by using football to bring together young people from different sides of the ethnic divide.

In co-operation with international organisations, various municipalities and non-formal educational institutions, Football Friends delivers educational programmes to promote youth development. The organisation currently runs football programmes in Belgrade and Foča which have served around 650 participants since 2005.
